769 all, let us turn back to the second section of this chapter on the relationship between parents and children.[1] The first sub-section on the birth of children has the following:

858 842 782 769 Although their feeling towards children seems to be rather indifferent, ...yet in case of childlessness the barren woman would go to the bamboo mountain at Hsü-chia-tu to beg the clan spirit (a cluster of golden bamboo) for a son. After worshipping and offering prayers she would sleep in the temple.

According to this conception the number of children one has or whether one has any at all is predestined by the clan spirit. The childless woman can go and beg from him. But this spirit is no other than a cluster of golden bamboo, and the name of the place where he resides 773 is the bamboo mountain. Thus, according to the Lolo, bamboo is the original source of mankind. In other words man is born from the bamboo, and they believe that their ancestors and they themselves have a blood relationship with the bamboo.

Secondly, if this assertion of their belief in the blood relationship with the bamboo is not far wrong, we can draw on the mythology concerning the origin of the White Lolo in the border regions of Yunnan and Kwangsi to help us understand this relationship.

In very ancient times, along the Han river there floated a tube of fragrant bamboo. When the tube reached the river bank it exploded and a man appeared. The man, whose name was "a tsa", was able to speak as soon as he was born..... He lived in a hole underground, and subsisted on wild fruits and hunting. One day as he took a

[1] [This section has not been translated.--Analyst]